An Historic Old City.

Alexandria, a city of considerable historic interest, is situa ed on the right bank of the Potomac, about seven miles from Washing-

The intent of this article is not to give a geographical description of the place, but to parrate some of the impressions made and to give an account of a few of the many objects of interest seen by the writer during a recent trip to and about that city.

On our arrival we were driven to the Braddock House which derives its name from the fact that Gen. Braddock had his headquarters there. The old house stands to-day as it did then. The hand of time has been right beautiful on it, but with few even. been laid heavily on it, but with few excep-tions it is in a remarkably good state of preservation. It was, no doubt, in its time a magnificent mansion, built on a promi-nence and commanding a beautiful view of the river. The interior of the house, so we were told, has not been altered in any way were told, has not been aftered in any way since Braddock's time and is well preserved, especially the "blue room," in which Washington received from General Braddock his first commission. It was also in this house where the conference took place between General Braddock and his American officers in which he was warned the probability of a supraise NORTH LEE STREET,

This case also contains his farm spurs, boot strap or gaiter, a piece of cloth from the coat worn by him at Braddock's defeat, July 9th, 1755, a piece of the coffin which contained his remains, his field compass, his cupping instrument and sever al letters of his, besides other articles of interest. Occupying a prominent place in the lodge room is the clock which was stopped by Dr. Dick at the moment of his death, the hands pointing to twenty minutes past ten. On the walls are oil paintings of rare value; On the walls are oil paintings of rare value; one of Washington in full Masonic dress painted for the lodge in 1794 by Williams, of Philadelphia. On the back of the canvass in the handwriting of the artist is this inscription: "His Excellency, Geo. Washington, Esquire, President of the United States, aged 64; Williams, pizzit ad virum, Philadelphia, September 18, 1794" For this portrait the lodge has been offered tenthousand dollars and refused to part with it. There is beside a full length portrait

There is beside a full length portrait of Washington, also one of Lafayette in the unif rm of a continental guard officer paint-ed in 1784; one of Lord Fairfax painted in London in 1730 and many others of great worth and antiquity. Among the vast number of relics are two which deserve special mention—the three candle sticks used at the laying of the corner-stone of the Capitol and for which five thousand dollars has been refused, and an ancient Masonic staff, which was presented to the lodge by Col. Mountford in 1811. He said, "Its precise age I have not been able to trace, but I be-lieve it has existed for canturies past in Europe as the property of gentlemen of our order of first standing in society."

It would be almost an impossibility to describe each and every article of interest in this treasure house, and so I will not attempt more, but will say that it is worth a trip to Alexandria to behold the almost sacred relics contained within this lodge room and our thanks are due to Brothers Duffey, HOT-WATER BAGS, SAGE.
